Foreword

The production of A Guide to Smokefree Dining in San Francisco is a wonderful example of a cooperative community venture. In the fall of 1991, the Smokefree Action Coalition (SAC), an ad hoc committee of tobacco control activists, surveyed more than one hundred restaurants that had voluntarily gone smokefree to determine what impact a smokefree policy had on business. (The impact was overwhelmingly positive!) Eighty-three percent of the respondents said they would like to be included in a guide to smokefree dining that SAC proposed.

The Coalition of Lavender-Americans on Smoking and Health (CLASH), an organization that addresses tobacco-related hazards among lesbians and gays, volunteered to produce the guide as a community service and to honor the commitment made by SAC, of which it was a member. CLASH enlisted a small army of volunteers to gather the information that appears in this guide and to verify, first and foremost, that these establishments permit no smoking in any indoor space on their premises. (We do include restaurants in this guide that allow smoking on outdoor open patios.)

The Tobacco Free Project of the San Francisco Department of Public Health - Bureau of Health Promotion and Education - graciously volunteered to pay for the printing of this first edition. The Tobacco Free Project is working to create a smokefree San Francisco by integrating tobacco prevention and cessation services and by establishing smokefree policies.

Special thanks to them for underwriting this venture and to the Tobacco Free Coalition for helping to mail a survey to over 3,000 restaurants inquiring about smokefree status. Thanks, also, to the many members of my running club, the San Francisco Front Runners, who allowed me to recruit them to do the legwork and check out the leads that came our way. And thanks to Len Casey and Bruce MacCarter for their persistence in researching many of the difficult-to-track-down establishments.

The restaurants are presented in alphabetical order. They are also indexed by type of cuisine and location to enhance the usability of this guide. Please bear in mind that prices and hours are likely to fluctuate and that the descriptions of the restaurants were provided by owners or managers. As such, they should not be interpreted as restaurant reviews. The establishments in this guide run the gamut from fine dining to fast food. On the whole, we were very impressed with quality and are delighted that the guide contains more than a few gems. The restaurants represent a diversity of ethnic and culinary styles and are widely dispersed throughout the city.

In the same spirit of community cooperation that launched this project, we solicit your input to maintain the most comprehensive list of smokefree restaurants. Although every effort was made to ensure accuracy, we will be grateful to hear from users of this guide, if any information needs to be amended in future editions. And, of course, we are anxious to learn about the inevitable smokefree establishments that eluded us the first time around. For your convenience, we have included an information sheet after the last index. To request additional copies of this guide, please write to Smokefree Dining Guide, Tobacco Free Project, 1540 Market Street, #250, San Francisco, CA 94102 or call 415-554-9151.

As a public service, A Guide to Smokefree Dining in San Francisco will be distributed free of charge. If you are pleased with it and would like to find out how you can help promote pollution-free indoor space, contact the Tobacco Free Project at 415-554-9151 or fill out the coupon in the back. Of course, you are already helping by patronizing the restaurants in this guide and letting the managers know you were attracted by their clean air policies. In the meantime, happy, healthy dining in smokefree surroundings!
